

False indigo (Baptisia australis): This member of the pea family is popular in gardens due to its attractive foliage and showy purple flowers. It has a shrub like appearance. It is primarily pollinated by queen bumblebees, which feed on its nectar. It is also a larval host for butterflies and moths. Blooms April through June.

