

New York ironweed (Vernonia noveboracensis): This tall, upright plant features clusters of small, deep purple, composite flowers, and lance-shaped leaves. Its nectar is used by butterflies and moths as well as native bees and birds eat its seeds. Blooms August through September.

