

New England aster (Symphyotrichum novi-angliae): This aster lives in prairies and meadows and has beautiful daisy-like purple rays with yellow centers. Like the smooth blue aster it is an important late season food source for bees and butterflies, especially for migrating monarchs. It is also a larval host for the pearl crescent and checkerspot butterflies. Blooms August through October.

