

New Jersey Tea (Ceanothus americanus): This low growing shrub has small clusters of white flowers. Its leaves were dried and used to make a type of tea in the American Revolution. Butterflies and bees utilize its flowers for nectar and pollen. Birds eat its seeds and it is also a larval host for many butterfly species. Blooms May through July.

