

Purple coneflower (Echinacea purpurea): Although this species is not native to Long Island, it has become naturalized and provides great resources for native wildlife, while also adding a beautiful aesthetic. They are often a popular plant in landscaping and have purple blooms that occur atop a single stem. It attracts butterflies and hummingbirds as well as native bee species. Blooms April through October.

