

Wild columbine (Aquilegia canadensis): Is a woodland wildflower with showy, drooping, bell-like flowers that are red and yellow. It is used by hummingbirds, bees, butterflies and hawk moths for nectar and pollen. Its seeds are consumed by finches and buntings. Blooms April through July.

