

Prairie dropseed (Sporobolus heterolepis): Is a clump-forming, warm season, grass that naturally occurs in prairies. It has fine-textured, hair-like, medium green leaves that turn golden with orange hues in fall and light bronze in winter. Their name comes from the tiny, rounded seeds that drop to the ground in the fall. Many types of birds eat its seeds, and its foliage provides cover for wildlife.

